

April 28th 2024 - Rev Jo Smith

As many of you know, David and I have a couple of grandchildren, some of you have many more, great grandchildren even! I must say, I love being a grandma. I love watching the little ones grow, and I marvel at the rapid changes in their lives, changes that are daily taking place. One of the things I find so fascinating is the independence that begins to develop at a very young age. It does not take long for a little one to begin saying, "Me do it myself!" That self-will and determination set the stage for many challenges as children want to do multiple things for themselves, some of which are not always healthy and wise. That fierce sense of independence and the development of self-identity is something that we value highly in our culture. We love and treasure our independence. Think about what we fear most about aging - yes, losing our independence. Yes, I will do it myself, thank you. See I want choices. And I want independence....And secretlywhat I wish Jesus said is: "I am whatever you want me to be. And you can be whatever you want to be: vine, pruner, branch, soil....knock yourself out." What Jesus actually said is: "I am the vine. My Father is the vine grower. You are the branches." Darn it!

The casting has already been finalized. Vines, and branches off of vines, are all tangled and messy and it's just too hard to know what is what...Not only are we dependent on Jesus, but our lives are uncomfortably tangled up together.

The Christian life is a vine-y, branch-y, jumbled mess of us and Jesus and others. Christianity is a lousy religion for the “do it yourself!” set.

And nowhere does Jesus teach more clearly that we are not independent do-it-yourself-ers than here in today’s gospel reading. You see, nowhere does Jesus demonstrate more clearly that we cannot go it alone, than in today’s gospel reading which is all about being connected to the vine, remaining connected and staying connected throughout this life journey we all are traveling. It is not about independence, doing it alone.

As we enter into today’s gospel, we find ourselves back on that evening of Maundy Thursday in John’s account of the Jesus story. Jesus knows he is about to die, leaving the disciples behind. So, he is urging them to remain in him, stay connected to him, and remain in fellowship with each other. Jesus is saying to the disciples and to each one of us, “Stay connected. Live in relationship to me. And, stay connected and live in relationship to each other. Make your home in me just as I do in you. Continue on in my teaching and example and remain in fellowship with each other.” And, he gives us this wonderful image of the vine and branches.

Now, if we think about wild grapevines, or any vine for that matter, one thing we soon realize is that vines and branches are tangled and messy. Let me tell you about my love hate relationship with the vine covered pergola at the St Mark’s rectory. Its glorious and beautiful and cool and shady but it is also messy and hard work and needs maintenance and attracts undesirables! (like the rats)

And the truth of the matter is that our lives, our families, and our places of work or study or play are all gorgeous and messy places. Life is just that way. Life is just a beautiful vine-y, branch-y, jumbled, tangled mess. Yet, when we look at a cultivated grapevine, we can see that the vine grower has put an anchor to the main vine. The branches are sorted out, trained and even disciplined. There is a wire structure that supports the vine from below and from above. All of the dead branches have been removed. And, the vines and branches that are cultivated end up producing large quantities of grapes.

With this image that Jesus shares, he shows us that Christ is the source of all life. Our very existence is dependent on God, who nurtures and cultivates us. We are not and cannot be the vine that gives life to all. Neither are we the vine grower, the one who cultivates, stakes, supports and yes, prunes the branches, though sometimes we try to claim this authority. We are the branches and, if we are to flourish, we need to stay connected to the vine, abide and remain dependent on the vine.

To abide is all about remaining, staying, taking up residence, and making one's self at home. It is about living in the community of Christ, participating in the life of that community, and staying connected to that community. When we abide in Christ, God's love is perfected in our lives. When we abide in Christ, love grows in us, casting out fear and hatred, and empowering us to act boldly.

In 1 John 4:16-18, we are reminded that, "God is love, and those who abide in love abide in God, and God abides in them. Love has been perfected among us in this: that we may have boldness on the day of judgment, because as he is, so are we in this world. There is no fear in love, but perfect love casts out fear; for fear has to do with punishment, and whoever fears has not reached perfection in love.”

Abiding in Christ means living in love, and there is no fear in love, for perfect love throws fear out on its ear. Abiding in Christ leads to fruitfulness. The fruit we bear is love. We will hear more about that from the gospel reading for next week, but even in this passage from First John, it’s clear that love is the whole point. In fourteen verses, John uses the word “love” 28 times!

And that love, shared freely with every other person, brings glory to God. This is our whole purpose for remaining in Christ. The fruit we grow is the love we show, and the love we show gives God glory.

Abiding in Christ means admitting that we are not independent, do-it-yourself-ers who can boast saying, or “I did it my way.” Abiding in Christ means accepting that we are dependent on Christ and on each other. It means graciously receiving the support Christ offers us, most often through the caring of our brothers and sisters. It also means consenting to be pruned. It means letting go of the things that hinder our growth in love, things like fear and hatred, greed and jealousy, grudges and resentment, shame and guilt, and all the other vine-y, branch-y, tangled things that mess us all up. And, abiding in Christ is always about belonging, belonging to the One who gives us life, life that truly matters. You see, this abiding in Christ is all about relationship.

The relational connectedness Jesus is speaking of is a connectedness that is only found through experiencing life together within the context of a faith community. And, yes, living in this kind of relationship, abiding in Christ and staying connected to Christ the vine, means it is not always going to be comfortable or easy. It can be difficult. Living in relationship with others requires give and take. Such living requires us to be vulnerable. Living in relationship with others means there will be ups and downs as we travel this journey together. You see, living life together in community means we have to put up with real people, some who are nice and some who are not, some who want things their way and others who don't want to challenge the status quo. Quite frankly, life together means having to put up with people who are sometimes very difficult. And, let's be very honest about something – it also means recognizing and having to admit that sometimes we are the ones who are being very difficult. The truth is, real, authentic community is something we often would rather shy away from because it can be uncomfortable. And, because we do not like to be uncomfortable, we are sometimes like a little child who says, "Me do it myself, I don't need anyone else."

However, today Jesus invites us to be real, to be deeply connected, to be planted in the very life of God and live in intimate relationship with him and with each other. Jesus invites us to be honest about who we are and what we are. Jesus invites us to come together and confess our hopes and fears, to share our dreams and disappointments, to be honest about our accomplishments and our failures, to be open about our blessings and our sin, and to be dependent on Him. In Jesus, we are invited into deep, authentic relationship with one another so that we can discover we are accepted, loved and forgiven by God who loves this whole world enough to send the Son.

It is by being connected, being planted in God and participating in Christian community, that we learn what real love is all about. When we stay connected to the vine and live together in authentic Christian community, the love that happens and is born enables us to then love others as we have been loved. It is that kind of love that brings others in and grafts them to the vine. And, it is that love that sends us out to make a difference in people's lives both here and around the world as love becomes the fruit of living in relationship to God and others.
